

If you're interested in writing something for our blog but don't know what, here are some ideas:

Evergreen content

Evergreen content is often simple lists (e.g., YouTube videos, books, quotes, etc.) with an explanation of each item. You can also collect statements from other students and put them together for a great blog post!

- Best YouTube essays to watch.
- Different philosophical approaches to one question. Get people to send in opinions.
- Best philosophy podcasts.
- Third-year dissertation topics.
- Staff research topics.
- Philosophical fallacies (avoid these fallacies in your work...).
- Day in the life of a philosophy student.
- How to study for a philosophy exam.
- Essay mistakes I made as a first-year philosophy student.
- Things learnt from first year (get statements from other students).
- Our best advice for philosophy students (1 sentence statements from students).
- Greatest philosophers. See here.
- Philosophers with the most interesting lives. See here and here.
- Books to read on certain philosophical topics.
- Harry Potter (or other pop culture) quotes that express deep philosophical ideas, or that touch on philosophical topics.
- Examples of A+ philosophy essays.
- Resources for great philosophy essay writing.
- Films with great philosophical influence (e.g., Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind).

Philosophical content

Most of our philosophical content is quite introductory, giving readers a glimpse into certain philosophical topics or philosophers. Perhaps there is a topic you're particularly interested in? Write 500-1,000 words on it, submit it to us, and you might find it on the blog! You can even shorten down essays you've submitted as coursework. See www.ethicajournal.com/blog/categories/philosophy for previous philosophical posts.

- Philosophy of UK prime ministers.
- Philosophy of Brexit.
- Lancaster's role in the slave trade.
- The difference between philosophers with different backgrounds.
- Philosophy of COVID-19.
- Philosophy of Harry Potter, Star Wars, The Simpsons, etc.

- An overview of the current literature within philosophical areas, such as free will, consciousness, reality, morality, numbers, etc.
- The range of philosophy and how it's hidden in other subjects.

Please read our submission requirements at ethicajournal.com/submissions for more information!